Which begs the question – is memory really working?

A world without passwords would make users feel more relaxed, less frustrated and less stressed, and 64% of respondents would be able to more easily manage their accounts.

So, what if you didn’t need passwords?

GO PASSWORDLESS

Add that to the fear of having an online account hacked – which was ranked as the number one common nuisance for respondents.

And only 10% of respondents were very confident that their passwords protected their online accounts from data breaches.

LastPass is possible.
